Hello,

Ms. Frost won't be available until Thursday. We'd be happy to talk with you then or after that. It seems that providing some background about the Board's role and legal authority would be helpful for you.

My deadline is today as I have Dec. 10 - 18 off. You had previously stated you'd have answers to the questions in the "next few days."

Here are my questions and line of inquiry:

After reviewing a state auditor general report and records obtained from a third party, it appears the board dismisses a larger number of complaints than it does take action. What is the reasoning behind dismissing such a large number of complaints?

Several people I have spoken with have talked about the difficulty in requesting an appeal on a decision made by the board or a review of evidence. Many have noted the difficulty in being able to interface with the board in a setting other than at a public meeting. What steps does the board take to make itself more available to the public and professionals to allow for greater transparency?

Earlier this year, the board moved to consolidate its two investigative committees into one committee. One of the new people assigned to this committee is an individual named Justin McCormick who has had a number of complaints filed against him and so has his wife. Does the board find any ethical issues with having a professional who has had multiple complaints made against him as a member of a "super" committee that aims to investigate complaints?

In my research I've also noticed that a number of people who have come and gone from the board have had connections to other members in some form or another. What steps does the board take to ensure that the candidates that do apply to the board do not have conflicts of interest and that the board is getting a wide variety of professional opinions?

An attorney I spoke with noted that filing a complaint with the board has "no point" as this attorney claimed the board sides more often than not with veterinarians and often "outright dismisses" claims made by pet owners. With a board mainly consisting of veterinarians and some who have had complaints, how does the board ensure fairness in the complaint process? How often do board members recuse themselves from voting on cases?

Some are pushing for changes to the law for pets to not just be considered property so in instances of malpractice a person can sue for intrinsic value. Is this something that the board would support?

Is this the stance of the board after consulting with counsel? Arizona Public Record Law states that emails, even if it is a personal email, if used in an official capacity are public record and this includes not just the message but the email as well. I will be reaching out to the Arizona Ombudsman's Office this morning to confirm and if necessary, file a complaint as well as a public records request.

Hello,

Yes, I still believe that the personal email ADDRESSES of our Board members would be considered personal information which we could not share. To be clear, as previously noted, I am only talking about their personal email addresses and not the content of any emails that were related to Board business.

If you will please share the information that you have that indicates that personal email addresses would be public information, I am happy to look into it further.

Also, again, I am happy to let the Board Chair know that you have questions if you would care to share the nature of your request so that she has some idea about your inquiry.

Thank you,

No, they don't have State email addresses. I did not say any emails they send in relation to Board activities are not public information. Perhaps I misunderstood your question. I thought you were asking for their email addresses.

The vet board is a public body. I don't understand how emails that are subject to public records requests are considered personal information if they are used by a public body. I'm assuming the emails use the same naming convention of firstname.lastname@vetboard.az.gov?

Hello, you can direct questions to me and I am happy to try to assist you.

The Board's spokesperson is the Board Chair, Nicole J. Frost, CVT. If you will please let me know what you are working on and what questions you may have, I can let her know.

The Board members' email addresses are personal information which we do not disclose. They would refer any inquiries to me.

I was trying to find out who is the best point of contact for questions I have for a story I am working on as well as the email for members of the board so I can email them specific questions/requests for an interview. That information is not readily available (to my knowledge) on the board's website.
